

The New York Times

March 25, 2009

City Room

Blogging From the Five Boroughs

By Jennifer 8. Lee

PEOPLE & NEIGHBORHOODS

This is a menu beyond peanuts and Cracker Jack. At the soon-to-be-open Citi Field, the restaurateur Danny Meyer is refining the food offerings to include pulled-pork sandwiches on brioche buns, spare ribs seasoned with Kansas City rub and shrimp rolls. While at the new Yankee Stadium, which opens April 3, the choice of food will include Johnny Rockets and Brother Jimmy's BBQ, and sandwiches from the premium butcher Lobel's. [NYT]

The old Yankee Stadium will be chopped up and sold to fans in little pieces as part of a $10 million-plus deal the team struck with the city. [New York Post]

The Ridgewood Theatre, the oldest continuously operating movie house in the nation until it closed a year ago, will get an encore. [New York Post]

The Interior Secretary said the crown of the Statue of Liberty may reopen to visitors by July 4th, The New York Post and Daily News report.

Pedestrians in the Financial District, SoHo, TriBeCa and other areas have been snapping cellphone pics of the three-wheeled Aptera 2e, a two-seater Jetsons-evoking vehicle with doors that raise upward. [New York Post]

The daughter of the late Leonard Bernstein, Jamie Bernstein, will lead the Young People's Chorus of New York City in her new composition, "NYC Shout-Out," which she calls "an urban street chant," at St. Paul the Apostle Church. [New York Post]